

Mute

by lex Monday, Aug 13 2018, 10:01am international / poetry / post far more eloquent than speech is silence, how is one able to respond to subtle variations of tone while screeching and gibbering from vocal cords and lips?

there, where frequencies speak plainly in one silent inaudible note or the whirring of a galaxy and its symphonic tones captured only by silencing the primitive mouth and listening -- that is where true communication occurs of course i am able to articulate but prefer the infinite lexicon of existence over the babble and shrill of 'civilised' men