Toward

by anon Saturday, Sep 8 2018, 3:19am international / poetry / post its stillness draws me, the lake is mirror still tonight a motionless mist hangs above it transported away from the shrill of town, people, the lake is more than it seems granting more than peace, its stillness draws into its depths, blacker than a moonless night enter and find ur rest, tho this is a projection not of the lake but of my tedium and the inability of the world to satisfy my profound need, which was always more than the world could offer -hollow dreams, baubles and tinsel are the empty promises that feed impoverished minds of what use are these transparent lures? they do not fascinate or satisfy old souls weary from too many sojourns into lost worlds yet paradise rests hidden somewhere in my bones i feel it, but no map or indication is hinted, only its powerful silent call, u have had enough, why persist i am waiting for ur return?

the call is strong, the origin never ceases its pleas, imploring ceaselessly -what a curse to know and not behold and embrace, why does it beckon, not for the cessation of futile pursuits or death but for triumph, a hero's reward?

the dark night is cool but not without comfort the lake speaks silently knowing my thoughts, responding with its perfect peace dawn would soon dissolve the blanket of night and awaken the noise and static cities and towns offer but this is how it must be there is nowhere else to go when everything loses its allure in the last darkness before the screaming dawn a haunting familiar voice whispers, i have not abandoned you u are closer than u think supreme peace to you, my enduring Love

Inverse Times Open Publishing. http://inversetimes.lingama.net/news/story-277.html