

Aquaglide

by luke Friday, Jun 1 2018, 5:14pm international / poetry / post birds of the sea and waters broaden their wings and allow natures air currents to carry them for miles just above the water without the slightest effort, such is the power of instinct that reads what man cannot see or sense as he is divorced from his nature

there are times when it -- confined cultural life -- becomes tedious and painful, so divorced from the real is culture that it now tortures those that subscribe to its fictions, lies and separation its media dribbles this and that, mostly lies and propaganda, so it becomes necessary to glide on nature's many avenues of freedom -- ever available to those that see, feel and sense wherefore art thou romeo?

never mind juliette, i am skipping above the waves in this expansive sea/see what do you see romeo?

it's not so much seeing as feeling and allowing sense to guide/glide to where do you fare romeo?

destinations are a dream, juliette as i have already arrived from where i departed so long ago please take me with you romeo who or what prevents you from flying, juliette?

my family and place here in my abode indeed juliette, where is your real place, what is your real home?

what binds you is the known -- the perversity of men

answer from your heart juliette, spread your wings of your own volition and you would join me in paradise in an instant

'To be or not to be' is not a question, it's a proposition

Inverse Times Open Publishing. <http://inversetimes.lingama.net/news/story-29.html>