

MidTerm Result: The Obvious Escapes Most Americans

by drake Wednesday, Nov 7 2018, 11:55pm

international / prose / post

What is the point of a one stable two horse race? Clearly both major parties are owned by the same interests, so what would you think would really change? The short answer is NOTHING of substance, only cosmetic appearances. Real change involves real competition of differing core beliefs and policies and it takes a micro surgeon to determine any real differences in either the blue or red camps today, though tiny minority issues are constantly presented to the public as crucial while the real crucial issues are forgotten, gay rights, abortion policies etc, are not crucial issues that affect the democratic MAJORITY, but how do these ridiculous non-majority concerns effect real change, short answer again, they DO NOT, they serve to distract from the real issues.

And so another absurd, worthless election is completed and while it appears that new faces may offer some hope, these new partisan members of Congress must go up against the Deep State and its entrenched status quo, and as history has clearly proven they have buckley's and no chance of effecting real change, existing entrenched powers are simply too strong for individuals to contend with, fact; furthermore, if they do not toe the status quo line their terms in office become relatively short. Huge benefits/inducements are offered by those private interests that own government and human nature being what it is, what do you imagine would be the result? The once hopeful representatives usually capitulate to forces that prove insurmountable. So what would you, take the offered benefits, career options or futilely attempt to serve the real interests of the people? Indeed, the answer is a given as history confirms.

CLEARLY what is required in the USA to effect REAL change is revolution where the people/majority actively fight as one for REAL CHANGE, not that any revolution today requires force of arms. Real change today only requires social unity in the causes that matter to the MAJORITY, a majority that transcends arbitrary, designed petty social and ideological divisions.

What should concern ALL Americans is how easily they are swept up and distracted from the real issues, climate change, needless hyper-destructive wars for the profit of the few, failing local infrastructure, disappearing health care and social services, and above all, stagnant wage growth over decades, while elites continue to rake it in -- what day is it America? Wage disparity today is at an all time high but how much press does that critical issue receive by an elite owned media, NONE?

While you eat shit the pigs continue to gorge themselves at the trough, yet you are blind to the obvious when election time descends on a media managed nation/population. Get your priorities straight and do not waver or falter and you may have a chance of effecting REAL CHANGE. The nation and its critical apparatuses have been hijacked by wealthy minority interests, obvious, and that reality should be of PRIMARY concern to ALL Americans.

The elite owned mass media is NOT your friend, it serves only those that own and benefit from its LIES and distractions. For instance, the officials of the Bush administration are guilty -- established fact -- of the most heinous wars crimes and deceptions, supported at the time by the mass media, yet not a word from the elite owned media on this important issue of JUSTICE.

While you continue to be herded like so many sheep your nation and its people continue to suffer at the hands of psychopathic criminals that YOU have allowed to take possession of it. That is, among other critical issues, the prevailing REALITY.

Now sit back and watch nothing change, as if you didn't know!

Inverse Times Open Publishing. <http://inversetimes.lingama.net/news/story-334.html>