

Cooperation and Mutual Aid and I'm not Directly Referring to Kropotkin

by jill Saturday, Jun 9 2018, 12:50am

international / prose / post

Though I must explain. Peter Kropotkin was a Russian naturalist and anarchist, his anarchist philosophy largely resulting from his observations of social species in nature and how they cooperate for the common good/survival of all.

However, this short piece asks the question does mutual aid and cooperation really work to enhance the optimum survival chances of those that use it? The short answer is, you bet it does!

The trouble is that it's not universally accepted, however, those that use it are the most successful of our species; you may wonder to which group I refer, though it should be obvious as the rest of us are slaves to that group in varying degrees. Indeed, I refer to the less than 1%, the elite as they are known.

This tiny group of global rulers cooperate and assist each other for their mutual benefit, and what a success story they are, as the rest of us remain divided, alienated and struggle to survive. And therein lies the obvious lesson, elites work and cooperate together, bankers, media moguls and large corporations have harnessed entire nations to do THEIR bidding.

In the USA they are known as the deep state, and notice how their policies are sold by puppet politicians, servants doing the bidding of elite masters that installed them in power, and notice how their policies are managed and sold to the masses by the elite owned mass media.

They control every powerful state institution, we should all be aware of their impunity from the law and note how the military and the mega-corporations that supply same increase their wealth with numerous illegal activities. Even the Federal Reserve is an elite owned private bank/entity that prints the US dollar then lends it to governments throughout the western world; their wealth and power is staggering, though they endeavour to remain behind the scenes as they are aware that ostentation leads to jealousy, targeting and victimisation, lessons learned over centuries by dynastic ruling families ensure they remain in the background pulling the levers and strings of rule today.

And if any person anywhere manages to make it, huge wealth and influence on his/her own, they are immediately invited to join the group; former Aussie Rupert Murdoch is a good example, he started with only one small newspaper in South Australia which he inherited and now controls a huge global media empire. However, today he sits and works with the global elite at CFR meetings with other moguls. Murdoch is now notorious for swaying elections and dictating elitist policy to politicians worldwide. So you see the effects of mutual cooperation and mutual aid. Every elite interest benefits from this coordinated approach while we stupidly compete with each other while they cooperate, though their direction leaves a lot to be desired as they jealously guard their own interests ONLY, as for the rest, the majority, they are essentially economically enslaved by the banks in order to restrain any attempt to rebel; slaves today neither have the time or energy to fight and that is no accident, it was engineered after the social revolutions of the 60's; which society was deemed to have too much money/funds and so had plenty of time and opportunity to assess and rebel, and rebel they did -- whereas today the enslaved masses have no time and are hardly able to resist the gross injustices that face them daily.

However, today's enslaving chains are far from accidental or normal, as the huge disparity in wealth/wages indicates, consider the pay difference in the tens of millions between the highest and lowest on the social scale and that reality is an engineered outcome learned from the unruly populations of the 60's.

But the above is not my point merely examples taken from history and reality as background, my POINT is, why allow these elites to maintain their control over us economically, via misinformation in the media and social division, which paralyses coordinated opposition?

A good question, isn't it, while all the while elites everywhere cooperate and work together like socialists and anarchists in the Kropotkin sense?

Surely you don't mind if I refer to the masses as neutered, powerless and nose-ringed, though that could change any time by merely disconnecting from the management methods of nefarious elites that are responsible for all the wars, greed and carnage in the world today.

And to think their success is all based on mutual aid and cooperation -- learn people, LEARN.

Remain unified and never allow elites to divide on any grounds, racial, religious, ideological, class or whatever; We are in REALITY the most powerful social force on earth if we cooperate, assist each other and remain united. How simple is that? Why should elites be the only group that utilises this simple formula for success?

 Mutual Aid -- Kropotkin

 What is Property? -- Proudhon

Inverse Times Open Publishing. <http://inversetimes.lingama.net/news/story-46.html>