

The Critical Time Factor in All Coups

by cyd Thursday, Feb 7 2019, 8:31pm

international / prose / post

A successful coup d'état once initiated is critically time dependent, if it fails to achieve its objective in 24 hours, one week at the absolute outside, then it is likely to fail. History is replete with successful fast snatches of power and drawn out failures in this respect. External or internal forces that foment coups are well aware of the critical time factor, a successful coup is a SHOCK tactic and shock must by nature be hard and fast. So in view of historical success and failures the already drawn out coup attempt in Venezuela is headed for failure, so Washington's plan B, which the mass media ignores in its full implications, has been queued.

What day is it?

External military invasion by a foreign power is clearly counter-productive as then most citizens would oppose it, so external supported guerilla war (attrition) is the next best option. Nevertheless, the world is keenly aware that the US attempted coup to oust/murder Turkey's president Erdogan failed miserably and wrought havoc on middle class Turkish society, as Erdogan made thousands of sweeping arrests immediately after surviving the coup attempt -- so yet another recent American failure which the media is loath to fully cover, after all America cannot handle defeat and loss of face/faith.

Regardless of the sequence followed by American think-tanks the Venezuelan coup is doomed to fail as the instigators are known mental cripples, psychopaths in fact, foremost among them John Bolton and Mike Pompeo, you couldn't get two more linear thinking myopic types if you tried, and the world is far too complicated today for these types, as is evident in the damage both are inflicting on America.

Another factor is the use of tired and exposed methods of intervention based on LIES. America has recently launched a 'humanitarian aid' ploy in Colombia, convoys are now stationed at the Venezuelan border. But it's all old hat, the WORLD is aware of these tissue thin tactics which have been over-used by America and NATO in the recent past, in fact this US attempted coup and the machinations behind it are making WORLD headlines as I write, a reality that no successful coup can afford, secrecy is absolutely essential to success; indeed it was Putin who directly warned Erdogan that the US was plotting to kill him. Had Putin not intervened Erdogan would be dead today and a US puppet regime would have been installed in Turkey.

Venezuela has already survived the enforced on allies, crippling economic warfare, sanctions and embargos inflicted on Venezuela, hence the DESPERATE coup attempt today, which when it fails completely would have done more harm to the United States (dollar) than it has done to Venezuela and its legitimate government.

So the best strategy for other nations is to urge and encourage Bolton/US to invade and use the recently transferred from the East, troops in Colombia.

C'mmon John, you can do it, America is 'invincible' (lol) remember, notwithstanding it has actually lost most of its wars since WWII, but let's not allow REALITY to get in the way of a good American exceptional and indispensable, dream. So give it your best shot, you can only shoot yourself in the foot AGAIN, but don't worry the media would cover (as in disguise) your failures as usual. But it's a damn shame the WORLD is not sufficiently nose-ringed by the media as it is in Orwellian America today.

Inverse Times Open Publishing. <http://inversetimes.lingama.net/news/story-465.html>