Today the USA as a nation is failing on EVERY FRONT domestically (social dis-integration) and internationally, dominance/influence fading at speed. Now, there is always cause and effect for any change, and we are easily able to trace the reasons why.

The only control left to the USA today, as it has now been overtaken by Russia in weapons development, for a fraction of the cost I might add, is the petro-dollar, which has also become the reserve trading currency for all resource trade between nations. How was it possible to achieve this brazen con on the entire world as any nation that is able to force the world to use its currency for trade must by consequence become the world's most powerful nation?

After WWII, the USA, due to its relatively minimal losses in that war, and the fact that it was waged primarily in Europe/Russia left it and its industrial complex unscathed, so it was easy to assume power when most of the civilised world was in ruins and suffering the deep trauma of WWII.

It 'capitalised' on circumstance and lent money (Marshall Plan) to the ruined European nations and nuclear conquered Japan while assuming, via various newly formed organisations, a system of debt slavery on the rest of the world, with the exception of Russia and China, the two dominant nations today, economically and militarily as they have formed an alliance.

Of course capitalism requires imperialism to function and exploit other weaker resource rich nations, so the corporate ruled USA took to exploitation with a passion, supported by its economic (debt slavery) and then powerful military, until of course the lost war with Vietnam, which was the turning point toward demise though it took time to see.

The Vietnam war exposed the fact that the USA was printing paper dollars to compensate for its losses and military adventurism in Indo-China, in fact it became obvious, so then president Nixon took the USA off the gold standard completely in order to facilitate a free hand printing un-pegged toilet paper dollars, which the world was forced to use, as America had arranged with Saudi Arabia and other oil producing nations, to peg the paper dollar to OIL trading; the deal made was a trade-off with the Saudi monarchy that America would protect it at all times, providing the Saudis adhered to the petro-dollar arrangement, which reality is very evident today, as the world is aware that the Saudi regime is an oppressive, medieval throwback in history; however, the USA and the Saudis are entangled in a mutually dependent relationship; for instance, if the Saudis were to allow oil trade in another currency the USA would economically fail overnight, literally; so you see the extent to which both nations are mutually dependent and America imagines itself free, what a laugh!

The Saudis by insisting that all oil trade be transacted in US currency ensures the dollar's 'value' on international exchanges, as other nations must then acquire dollars to trade, a nifty trick no doubt but one which binds the USA to one of the most primitive, brutal and oppressive regimes on the planet. So essentially the dollar is only being held up by the Saudi Royal family, a most precarious situation for America today as will be seen. The Saudis, well aware of their military dependence are now purchasing weapons frantically and are pushing to develop a nuclear capability which would free them from their dependence on America as neither nation trusts the other.

Now no-one likes being held to ransom by the paper petro-dollar so Russia and China pursued an alternative economic trade plan, which allows nations to trade in other stronger currencies, as China backed this offer with convertibility to gold, yes, the yuan is now directly convertible to gold under China's new trading agreements, both Russia and China have been slowly dumping their dollar reserves in favour of gold purchases to support their agreed upon new trading scheme, which would allow for huge freedoms in international trade, with the side-effect of releasing the stranglehold America has on the world at this time. Indeed, it would also paralyse America's ability to blackmail other nations with economic sanctions and embargos based on dollar power.

I need not continue as China's international trade and infrastructure projects and everything it entails, new trading alliances, infrastructure banks etc, is open news today, and Russia, which is almost an economic colossus maintained an important lead over America, weapons development. Together Russia and China form an unstoppable alliance/force clearly able to defeat America on every major front. Today, it is not a matter of IF China and Russia would vanquish America but WHEN, as all the necessary requirements/factors are already in place. Interestingly, America's trade deficit (with the WORLD) released today is the highest ever recorded, read the signs, people!
