

Cormorant's Wing

by rayn Sunday, May 5 2019, 9:10am international / poetry / post two cormorants winged over the cemetery by the sea never seen before tho it is home to hawks hovering in strong and easy breezes until they jerk and dive on defenceless prey cormorants are my favourite seabird an omen perhaps unseen over a thirty year span spear beaks and supple necks tho a cormorant's wing is something special turned back where other birds fan their flight feathers

a natural fighter in the sky and sea perfectly adapted for either medium while humans flounder in both i watch women pass with noses high and rehearsed gaits hoping to catch eyes and smiles, tho completely unnatural are their movements asian silk on asian skin a perfect match no occidental woman could hope to compete tho they stretch their necks in vain attempts to be graceful clod-hoping bovines

you haven't a chance,
i have always preferred opium to tobacco