It is important to first note that PM Morrison is an arch, religious and political conservative, so we must first try to understand what conservatism actually is and whether it fits into the natural world's (cosmos) scheme of things as the cosmos/nature is a direct representation of creation's power and wisdom proven by its infinite characteristic, that is, if any system or movement is multiplied by infinity, forever, and it fails to persist then it is clearly perverse, as infinity proves itself daily by the sheer fact of continuous existence. Or put another way, if infinity had the smallest flaw it would have ceased to exist over an infinite period of time as that flaw would have extinguished it, do you see the reason/logic in this? Probably not, as few are able to understand the workings of existence/cosmos which we are clearly part of. But it's better to try and explain than avoid the issue due to lack of comprehension.

Scott Morrison, duplicitous, authoritarian, lying hypocrite

The conservative approach is authoritarian rules and regulations, attempting to fix the infinite universe into a finite box, which is clearly impossible, as the universe never produces identical objects, its character is constant creation, for example, compare any grain of sand on our earth to another and you would discover they are different, the universe never repeats itself, know that everything is unique in God's creation. The same proof obviously applies to the geometric designs in snowflakes, they are NEVER repeated, indeed, everything is unique including species of the same genus. Humans are all different though belonging to the same genus, as the difference makes for dynamism NOT uniformity/stasis, as perverse conservatives would attempt to impose on all.

Recall school 'uniforms' that attempt to make everyone look the same, and rules and regulations that attempt to produce similar behaviour patterns in a heterogeneous group, plus social (not criminal) laws which attempt to do likewise though they are enforceable by the State, and as we know all States are corrupt and rotten to the core, self-evident, but that is not the most vital point here. Uniformity is death, it is simply unnatural and goes against the universal infinite pattern and any attempt to fix anything goes against the universal flux. Heraclitus, (600 BC) among others before and since, conveyed this by stating the obvious, "you never step into the same river twice!"

And what did Jesus state about himself as God, "I am Alpha and Omega," the beginning and end, implying infinity?

This is the God that hypocrite Scott Morrison pretends to believe though he clearly knows nothing of the character of Jesus as God or infinity, as he attempts with his conservative fixed (box) policies to IMPOSE by force (law) his personal perverse will on others, and deprive them of their God given liberties of free expression and peaceful protest because like ALL conservatives he serves mammon/money, hence his now Nazi or ultra-right wing policy to forcefully outlaw climate protests and boycotts in Australia in order to give his masters, commercial corporate interests, a freer hand to exploit and pollute the environment, which natural environment is a manifestation of the perfect harmony of the creator -- and this despicable lying clown thinks he's religious serving Mammon, what next, worshipping the horned God as they do in America?

A good rule of thumb to employ in assessing anything is whether or not that proposition is able to persist forever as does the universe/creation. Any attempt at 'uniformity' or stasis (fixed rule) opposes this universal character/law and therefore leads to death; clearly no person has the right to impose on any other peaceful person using violent or any other coercive means.

So my final message to hypocrite and lying bastard Scott Morrison is, blow it out your hypocritical, perverse arse, you duplicitous, evil scumbag!

CommonDreams article follows:

Australian Prime Minister Scott Morrison attacked environmental activists in a speech Friday, warning of a “new breed of radical activism” that was “apocalyptic in tone” and pledging to outlaw boycott campaigns that he argued could hurt the country’s mining industry.

“We are working to identify mechanisms that can successfully outlaw these indulgent and selfish practices that threaten the livelihoods of fellow Australians, especially in rural and regional areas,” Morrison said. “New threats to the future of the resources sector have emerged,” he said. “A new breed of radical activism is on the march. Apocalyptic in tone. It brooks no compromise. It’s all or nothing.”

Morrison claimed that “progressivism” - which he labeled a “new-speak type term”, invoking George Orwell - intends “to get in under the radar, but at its heart would deny the liberties of Australians”.

The remarks were made in a speech to the Queensland Resources Council, an organization representing mining interests in the northeastern Australian state. The Human Rights Law Center, the Australian Conservation Foundation, and the Greens immediately attacked the proposal as undemocratic and an attempt to undermine people’s rights to protest, often at the behest of big corporations.

“From ending slavery to stopping apartheid, boycott campaigns have played a critical role in achieving many social advances that we now take for granted,” Hugh de Kretser, executive director of the Human Rights Law Center, said in a statement. “The Morrison Government’s announcement that it is looking to ban certain boycott campaigns is deeply concerning.”

“It’s vital that people can come together and campaign against not only the companies that are committing human rights abuses or harming our environment but also the companies that profit from doing business with them.”

“Protest is an essential part of our democracy. To protect our democracy and help ensure a better future for all Australians, governments should be strengthening our rights to come together and protest, not weakening them,” said de Kretser.

Green party leader Adam Bandt called Morrison “a direct threat to Australian democracy and freedom of speech. The prime minister’s commitment to outlaw the peaceful, legal protest of Australian individuals and community groups reads like a move straight from the totalitarian’s playbook,” he said. “Instead of getting tough on the climate crisis, Scott Morrison is dismantling democracy.”

PM Morrison is an evangelical Christian and a very vocal supporter of US President Donald Trump.
