

Predetermination

(A prose poem)

a dead branch cuts into the sky forming a visually contorted, erratic series of curves and abrupt angles shedding its bark and revealing its smooth white wooden flesh in its dying though the branch of this conifer remains fixed to the tree while other smaller branches lay scattered on the ground, returned to nourish more life the mixed incongruous shapes of this dying leafless branch defies predetermination as does the rest of the natural world, nature never repeats itself, everything is unique though it may belong to a genus, unique from others of its kind it remains its shape advertises and confirms that existence was/is beyond the anxious and fearful attempts of conservative minds to impose formality/uniformity on existence and the human world, we are all unique though susceptible to lies, imposition and domination

'our' omniscient god planned everything including the future, existence is his predetermined design, they say -- so why is everything in the natural world unique, never replicated?

this 'minor' reality seems to have escaped these book-learned/enslaved dictators that seek to impose uniformity in appearance and behaviour on the slaves amenable to their absurd fantasies, misinterpretations and dictates good luck, as the real 'book' of creation, cosmic existence is the book of truth directly offered by creation itself for all to see/read and learn, only a fool and the profoundly lost would defy the obvious much to their great cost, climate catastrophe, mass extinctions and future famine

Fools!

find me the life in any man-made book which is able to compete with one little living weed, flower or living blade of grass, you cannot; all living things hold secret a direct route to the living creative force, which necessarily supports by its nature ALL things, including the profoundly lost human race, though the option to return/know is always available nothing knows in advance how many veins and pores a leaf will have or the shape of the branch that supports it, the creative force leaves final outcomes to chance in order for the new and unexpected to emerge, in which process Life delights though an inherent pattern exists but not a fixed outcome, which is always new and unique like creation itself the pattern is always harmonious at its heart, it doesn't stray from its inherent harmonious push into existence, yet what it produces is ALWAYS new and unique -- show me one grain of sand on the earth or snowflake that replicates another.

reach out feeling and absorbing the living with all your senses, there is nothing dead, static (uniform) in this or any other universe infinity is unable to repeat itself as it would then cease to exist as infinity, the very difference impels it to continue, if god has a name Flux would be appropriate, not the appellations given by men marvel at chance, which has produced everything that is, unique, ecstatic and pleasing, and realise the peace within you from which you too are able to create and contribute to the greater harmony, not the death that ALL religions spread like a plague on the earth theologians must lie as they have no truth, plain to see, so they replace the harmony/truth of reality and continuity with the discord and death of absurd destructive fictions that only feeble minds and children believe, beings that fly in the sky, have you seen a pig or cow fly with wings or without that match the beauty of the smallest flying insect which nature produces effortlessly by the trillions?

storms strip the leaves and weaker branches from trees yet the tree stands firm already recreating anew what was lost, marvel at the profound simplicity of nature's intelligence which is evident in the seeds of some Australian plants that require fire in order to germinate, which adaption they learned after man and his hunting fires invaded the land what do humans learn? how to kill things faster and faster, "subdue the earth" their biblical perverse and genocidal god commands, the god of lies, death and destruction all man made gods encoded in man made texts are devoid of the harmony that pervades existence -- sell your death and lies to each other, as you have done since you recorded your commands and fictions designed to enslave humanity

predetermination is proof of the lack of spontaneous creation and chance, you lying, demented fools -- nature's outcomes are never pre-designed, existence is not a clock the push is forward, undetermined, chance is the mother of creation/evolution - where is the life and joy of surprise in predetermination? creation is not prediction, the tiny particles/energies of existence live and dance in harmonious chaos that produce the new, never reproducing the old deal me a card

I am ready to win, lose or draw and play/dance again, this game is a game of chance everything continues in one form or another forever -- only fools are fascinated by dead fictions of a fixed, predetermined universe.
